mander, and Major Cary, commanding the local battalion, upon the fine appearance of the men, telling Major Cary that if all of the companies of his battalion showed up as well as this one there would be nothing to fear from the examination.

Company F, of the First Regiment, had only thirty-three men and three officers in line, and it did not make as good an appearance as the other. However, the men showed up to good advantage, their uniforms and equipment being in fairly good condition. The command was handicapped in point of attendance, several of the march in Washington on inauguration day and nine others being out of the city.

In noint of equipment, Companies cand F had an advantage over Companies A and E, which were inspected by Major Mailory Monday night, but the last named companies turned out more men for the inspections than did Companies C and F.

Officials, However, Ordered Police Off Trail of Alleged Cocaine Dealers.

WAS SHADOWED TO NORFOLK

Detectives Begged to Be Allowed to Make Arrest, but Authorities Refused.

But for the negative decision, it is claimed, of Mayor Richardson, Judge Witt and Commonwealth's Attorney Folkes, after they had held a conference on Thursday, March 4, D. W. Simons, who was arrested last Saturday afternoon in Norfolk on a charge of having cocaine in his possession, would have been arrested in this city last Thursday evening, as two detectives who had shadowed him nearly all cay had what they believed to be concursive evidence on which to hold him here.

It is said that the two officers were deeply chagrined when they were informed that the higher officials in the city government had decided it were hetter not to attempt an arrest because of a fear, or for some other reason, that Simons would escape legal punishment through some technicality. The officers, who had lain and watched in Murphy's Hotel for four hours or more, are said to have begged hard to be allowed to make the arrest. They were forced, however, to abide by the adverse decision of the other authorities, and Simons and an accomplice fied to Norfolk.

It is doubtful, however, it is imons would have been arrested, even in Norfolk, had it not been for the energy of a Richmond officer, who trailed him and his accomplice to Norfolk, and registered at the same hotel—the would have carne and they escaped his hands, to be lauded later by Norfolk detectives. OPERA CHAIRS

Will Hayes Ends Wandering New Seats at Auditorium May Be Ready for Wednesday Club

At a meeting of the Grounds and Buildings Committee last night a sub-committee recommended the sale at public auction of the Seabrock Warehouse property, now standing ide. Strong opposition to the sale developed when it was stated that the proceeds must go into the general treasury, and, unless specially appropriated, could not be used for purchase of other property. The question was recommitted for fuller information as to the probable value and the cost of putting the building in order to rent.

The budget not having been adopted, the committee did not open bids for opera chairs for the City Auditorium, but referred the sealed bids to a sub-committee to report to the full com-

Head of Carnegie Foundation Deals With Problems in Address to Teachers.

President Henry S. Pritchett, head f the Carnegie Foundation of the Advancement of Teaching, addressed the Richmond Educational Association on the subject of "A National System of Education" in the Jefferson Auditorium last evening last evening.

The Carnegie Foundation is generally conceived of by the public merely as a pension bureau for retired professors. As a matter of fact, however, it has come to be something much larger than this, namely, a central agency, dealing with education throughout the United States and Canada, and having United States and Canada, and having to do with standards of colleges, universities and high schools, and with professional education in the various States and Territories.

Dr. Pritchett's point of view, therefore, it that of one who is studying education from a national rather than a local point of view.

local point of view.

State Must Educate. In beginning his address he made clear the fact that he is not in favor of the revision of education by the central government. He believes that education has been entrusted, and wisely, by the Constitution of the United States to the separate States, but that this fact does not take way. from the importance of having these separate State systems of education closely related to each other and com-parable in their standards and aims There ought, he said, to be no educa Massachusetts. Entering college ought to mean the same thing in one State as in another, and all colleges should be related to the general system of public education of the State and of the economic development of the South.

Hopeful of Future.

In closing Dr. Pritchett epoke with enthusiasm of the great educational movement now going on throughout the South for better high schools and for better college standards and for industrial education. It is, he declared, the most significant feature of our national development, and if it is generously and wisely fostered this movement will in the end develop a system of education equal to the needs and aspirations of the country, and in this development will be found finally the solution of our most serious social, intellectual and economic problems. The difficulty will be for some years, he said, to find trained teachers for these new schools, and he urged that in this development it should not be forgotten that sincere and honest standards which existed on paper only. "The outlook for education were far more desirable and fruitful than higher standards which existed on paper only." The outlook for education in the South," he said, "is inspiring. Let us go forward with confidence and courage, but only so fast as we can build with sincerity and efficiency."
